THE DAY'S VOTING

Scenes at the Polls and on the Streets.

THE VOTERS CAME OUT QUITE EARLY

How the Battle Was Fought All Over the Two Districts of Oahu.

If there was one distinguishing feature of the day, it was that the voters came out early. At every precinct of the city the line of voters had been formed when the polls opened, and at some the number on hand was so great that the late comers faced certain waits of two or three hours.

In the fighting Seventh of the Fifth the lining up of the voters began before daylight, and the Home Rulers were early on the ground. They had a line which extended for nearly a block, and this was increased as the turnout of the Republicans began. When the polls opened there were 225 men waiting for their turn, and this number did not decrease very much until after three in the afternoon, the line then shrinking to proportions which made it possible for the end to be in sight. In fact, before that hour there was a serious thought in the minds of those interested that it would be impossible to get in all the votes, and there was talk of an attempt to have the polls kept open after the legal hour for closing. Protests were prepared, despite the opinion of a member of the bar that every vote of men ready to ballot must be taken. There were only 727 votes, and the last one was taken at 4:55 o'clock.

The interest centered largely about the Seventh, and all day long there was a large crowd of spectators in front of the grounds of the Reform School, where the balloting booth was placed. The crowds were made up of candidates and hundreds of onlookers, men from every precinct in the city, who were out, some looking for a friend to influence, if possible, and others there for the purpose of seeing into the overlooking of the events expecting some excitement. There was not a row during the entire day, the only phase of excitement being once when there was a great crowd present, the crowding caused hot words and a few blows.

Second in importance in the interest aroused, perhaps, was the Fourth precinct of the Fourth district. There the Portuguese battle was largely fought, and the way the people gathered to see the fun of the day indicated the intense interest that is felt in the outcome of this balloting. The people seemed to have as much feeling there for the representatives as they had for the head of the ticket, this being the only precinct in the city where such a condition obtained.

In the Eighth of the Fourth, the new precinct, there was always a long line of voters, and it meant a wait of an hour at least to get in a ballot. There was some fast voting done, but the line was not cleared until after the noon hour.

In the Second, the remainder of the old banner precinct of the Fourth district, the balloting was fast, and before the afternoon was half past there was a case of waiting officials. The First began voting early, and the natives from Manoa, Palolo and Waialae showed their interest by turning up in the morning.

At the Judiciary building there was a good crowd all day. There was an attempt to create a diversion when the Delegate arrived to vote, but it amounted to nothing, for the only man who offered to cheer was left alone, so that he gave up the attempt and replaced his hat. Room was made for the Delegate, and he voted without going to the foot of the line. Later in the day Barefoot Bill wanted to vote. Protests were made as the man was alleged to have committed a felony, and to have been imprisoned for the crime. Finally he solved the question temporarily by refusing to vote.

The first vote to be counted was that of Waimanalo. The ballots there were listed as soon as all those registered had voted, and this made it very early when the returns were in.

THE STORY OF THE PRECINCTS

SECOND OF THE FOURTH.

The polls closed promptly at the hour in the second precinct in Makiki park. The voting was practically finished in the morning but all afternoon the voters straggled in. Before the count began J. H. Fisher who had been watching all day predicted that Cupid would have at least 275, while Wilcox would not poll over 40. The count showed him to be good at guessing. The teller counted Kuhio "one" with monotonous regularity, while almost as often there was a "Cupid tally."

There was a total vote of 327 out of the registration of 347 and but four ballots were thrown out. Nearly all of these were rejected because of marks for both Cupid and Wilcox.

There was a protest from a Home Ruler against the counting of one ballot for Cupid, for the reason that the cross was marked in ink instead of in pencil. The objection was promptly overruled by the election board, but the disgruntled native could not be pacified, even after the Hawaiian member of the board had explained that the vote was good.

The count in this precinct was unusually quiet, there being no loud talking or quarreling, so overhauling was the majority for Kuhio.

THIRD OF THE FOURTH.

The polling booth for this district at the junction of the tram line and the Pacific Heights electric line in Nuuanu street was the center of a large crowd at the time of the closing of the polls. Within a half hour after closing the votes for delegate had been counted. There were many rejected ballots, among them being one that caused a great deal of merriment, as a voter had marked his ticket for Wilcox and added at the bottom of the ballot: "Wilcox—You go way back and sit down." Of course the vote was informal.

FOURTH OF THE FOURTH.

The count began in the fourth precinct at Emma Square immediately after the closing of the polls. There was a large crowd present, watching the count, which progressed rapidly. The Cupid votes piled up with a regularity that did the Republicans good, and caused a corresponding lowering of the mouth on the part of the Home Rulers. The count on the senatorial ticket showed considerable scratching from which the Republicans derived chief benefit.

Just before the polls closed there was a little dispute as to the vote of Jos. Gouvia. He had not voted but it appeared that his name had been scratched from the registration lists, and it developed that some other man of the same name had voted in his place. This Gouvia had really registered in the third precinct, but innocently made the mistake, and the candidate finding that his name was upon the lists made no objection, and it was not until the rightful possessor of the name came, that the error was discovered. There was a suggestion that Gouvia go over to the third district and vote in place of his namesake who had voted for him in the fourth but this idea was abandoned. No attempt was made to vote him for fear that it might lead to a contest, and as this was not wanted by the Republicans, the vote was lost.

There were two other similar cases, in which two Silvas and Rodrigues voted at the wrong precinct, but later the rightful voters were identified and allowed to vote.

FIFTH OF THE FOURTH.

The Kakaako district did itself proud for the Republican party, the big Home Rule majority being cut to nothing. Two Republicans carried the Home Rule stronghold, Kuhio and Isenberg, and the Republicans present became more and more enthusiastic as the count progressed. There was a disposition on the part of the Home Rulers, some of whom had become overcome by liquor, to crowd into the polling place and it finally became necessary to station a policeman at the door and keep all out of the room who had no official business therein.

Nearly the entire vote of the district was polled, Barefoot Bill, against whom a protest had been entered during the afternoon, being one of the last to cast his ballot. Just before the polls closed there was a slight dispute between a Hawaiian inspector and a member of the Home Rule committee, but the trouble was not serious. In fact the Kakaako district was a model of propriety compared to what its reputation
